what is food security?
food security is...

Access by all people, at all times to enough nutritious food for an active, healthy life
If you are reading this annual report, chances are that you already understand that hunger can be a serious community problem, even if you don’t see stick-thin children with distended bellies in your neighborhood. This is because hunger in America is not generally a matter of life or death. It is, however, about the ability to live and maintain an active, healthy life.

We in the food assistance business use the term “food security.”

It’s defined as “access by all people at all times to enough nutritious food for an active, healthy life.” Not especially compelling until you stop to consider the alternative: food insecurity. People affected by hunger in America either don’t get enough to eat to be healthy, or don’t have access to healthy food, or are unsure if they will have either of these things on any given day. And that may be living, but it is not an active or healthy life.

Food insecurity is on the rise in America according to the USDA.

No surprise there. The recession may be technically over, but it’s obvious that thousands of people are still unemployed, underemployed, running through savings, not making ends meet, or merely have the misfortune to be poor.

The Food Bank continues to see a rise in the need for services.

Greater Pittsburgh Community Food Bank is serving more people, and distributing more food – 22.5 million pounds this fiscal year – and we expect to do more next year. Here we take another moment to thank our community for helping us stay strong enough to confront the increased need.

Food insecurity is bad for the nation.

It is estimated to cost us some $90 billion a year. Specifically, people who don’t get enough of the right things to eat are at the doctor’s and in the hospital more often with preventable illnesses. Hungry children don’t learn as well, and have been shown to have more depression, cognitive disabilities and behavior problems. Seniors’ quality of health and life are directly influenced by nutrition. Hunger prevents this country from maximizing its greatest asset: healthy productive citizens.

Every month the Food Bank gathers and distributes nearly 1.9 million pounds of food to over 400 assistance programs dedicated to improving the quality of life for everyone in their community. We employ food drives, food rescue and salvage, special events and fundraising to help agencies like after-school programs, shelters, food pantries, senior centers, public housing communities and soup kitchens to feed those in need. Ninety-four cents of every dollar donated to the Food Bank goes directly to providing food and programs to end hunger in southwestern Pennsylvania.

In fiscal year 2009-10, the Food Bank:
- Purchased 3.9 million pounds of food to keep up with the increased need for assistance and the declining availability of donated food (up a half million pounds from 2008-2009)
- Increased the number of local food drives by 66% to 615.
- Launched The Community Table program, which recruits restaurants, food services and caterers to commit to preparing planned meals for specific agencies on a regular schedule.
- Increased the number of new volunteers 70% to 3,985.
In fiscal year 2009-10, the Food Bank:

- Increased farm donations and gleaned pounds of fresh produce by 37% to 306,276.
- Received 850,000 extra pounds of food donated from the federal government through programs like CSFP, TEFAP, and from USDA bonus commodities made possible by stimulus funding.
- Sold 52,690 more pounds of fresh produce through the Farm Stand program, a 32% increase over last year.
- Answered 3,063 calls for help phoned into the new “Get Help” extension 456.

mission statement

Our mission is to feed the hungry in southwestern Pennsylvania through a network of partners and to mobilize our region to end hunger.

We accomplish our mission by:

Serving as a central collection facility for grocery products and distributing them to member agencies serving the needy in southwestern Pennsylvania;

Involving the community as food donors, volunteers and financial supporters for the Food Bank and our member agencies;

Working collaboratively with others on programs that empower the needy to meet their own nutritional needs; and Communicating the nature of and solutions to the problem of hunger.
